

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The information contained in this book is drawn from many sources over a period of 25 years and the authors are conscious of the debt that they owe to the many contributors.

We acknowledge the initial reports provided by Burkes Peerage. This early contribution to the project stimulated the authors' appetite to pursue the research further. In addition the support of the University of Plymouth in subsequently arranging a postgraduate secondment to the Company provided significant capacity to continue the researches. In this connection, we thank Julia Sargent, Alston Kennnerley, Chris Wood and Jim Pearce for all their endeavours on our behalf.

Robert Baldwin, a historian, carried out initial studies and research into the shipbuilding Castle family on the Thames and also investigated the life and times of George Castle of Rotherhithe. We are grateful for his assistance.

A special mention however must be made of the extensive contribution by a few key people in recent times. Without their assistance, we would not have been able to produce such a remarkable finished history. We therefore thank Robert Latter MBE, Sue Castle Henry, Douglas Dashwood-Howard, Harry Irwin, Richard Hunter, Eric Walker and Rear Admiral David Pulvertaft (Rtd). Robert, Sue and Douglas made strenuous efforts in proof reading the final drafts of the history and the authors are grateful for their time and effort in completing this important task. Richard, Eric and David provided the much needed expertise in the field of ships figureheads and we acknowledge the time needed to check and investigate the whereabouts of all of the Castle figureheads displayed at the various yards and other locations.

Robert Latter MBE carried out extensive research into the Castle family pedigree and travelled around the North of England in order to verify the lines of descent shown in the pedigree and to ascertain any link with the 17th century shipbuilding family of Castle based on the River Thames.

Douglas Dashwood-Howard provided much valuable information about the Beech family history and of the business interests and activities of William Philip Beech and of his father Thomas Beech. We are grateful for his unstinting support for all of our efforts in writing this history.

Harry Irwin, based in Australia, researched the time Henry Castle spent in Sydney and of the partnership with Richard Dawson in the 1830s. The extent of the information available was extensive and a pleasant surprise.

Over the years, Sue Castle Henry has continuously provided valuable comments, observations and information about the history project and the Castle family background.

The recollections and stories of Gladys Bromley about her life at Long's Wharf, Woolwich have added a measure of authenticity to the history. Accordingly, we are grateful to her son, Frederick Bromley, for letting us have a full copy of all the notes taken during the many occasions he talked to Gladys about her memories of that time in the late 1890s and early 1900s.

We also thank the many family contacts we have made over the years and the details they supplied and we especially thank Graham Turner, Trevor Turner, Graham Castle and Douglas Castle. Further family contacts and sources of information continued to become available in recent years following the creation of a Castles Shipbreaking history website in 2006. In particular, we thank Barbara Love, Sue Cuerden, Geoffrey Castle, and Colin Castle.

Former Castles employees have always been willing to contribute their knowledge of past business activity, particularly in Plymouth, and we thank Joan Peters, Cecil Lane, Bernard Sendall, Sam Sharpe, E Powell and Ernest Harkom.

Many contributors other than family members have also added a wealth of information about some of the background details and we are grateful to Lionel Stribley, Stuart Rankin, Judy Edgerton, John Smith, Andy Endacott, Bob Aspinall, Gustav Milne, Elliot Wragg, Hugh Dullely, Pat O'Driscoll, Michael Bishop, Watkins Tugs, Alan Anderson, Richard Pearson and Jim Beatson.

Finally the authors wish to thank the following for permission to include the illustrations appearing in the book, other than those from the Castles Archives: the Richard Hunter Collection; the Dodds Family Collection and the Harry Irwin Archives.
