Access to and use of the Castles Shipbreaking history is provided subject to the following terms and conditions. Please read these terms carefully as your access to and use of this e-book will be deemed as acceptance by you of the terms of use.

After much reflection, it has been decided that the information contained within this e-book should be released as a non-commercial publication free for use for educational purposes by anyone concerned with the study or research into British Maritime History.

Accordingly, it should be noted that in using the content the copyright of our own material and that of others should always be acknowledged and references made to the various sources mentioned. The majority of the material is from our own archives but there are many items, particularly pictures and graphics, which are the property of others. These sources have been carefully referenced and permission to use them for this work has been obtained wherever possible. In those instances where the source could not be traced or found and is not referenced we welcome contact from any person or organisation who may feel that an infringement may have been accidentally incurred.

You may download the content and store a temporary copy for the sole purpose of viewing such content in whole or in part provided that such reproduction is to be used for personal private study and/or educational purposes only. It must not be used for commercial purposes and/or copied for sale in any form.

Any other use can only be undertaken with the written consent of the authors.
